

Cecilia Paz
HU090-A/Frawley
Illustrative paragraph
February 25, 2009

Girls Just Want To Have Fun

Utilizing the art of seduction, and cutting corners with ones girlfriends can result to a fun-filled Saturday night without emptying ones wallet.

Tired of seeing the same sea of fabric in your closet? Not having any new clothes to wear on a Saturday night can be frustrating; nevertheless, it is simple to not only have a free, new outfit, but having a whole Saturday night paid for. The first step to a fun, priceless night involves recruitment. Call up some girlfriends and ask them to bring some of their clothes that can be borrowed for the night. Recruiting friends saves money from not purchasing a new outfit, and carpooling is also inexpensive and eco-friendly.

Whether it is the unnecessary cover charge or twenty dollars drinks, club owners will attempt to suck every penny from ones pocket. Moreover, if going to a club or bar with a cover charge, the one good thing about this is that they usually do not start charging until after 10:00 p.m. Pitching the idea to the girls to arrive there before 10:00 p.m. to avoid an entry fee is always a good plan to avoid spending extra cash.

To avoid spending any money on a night out, there is always a way to get a free drink. Perhaps the easiest pawn is, men. Begin by picking a target; but, hopefully there will be many options for the night. A group of three or more men are the most ideal group. Go and stand around this group of guys, pretending to wait for the bartender's attention. While waiting around, being accessible and approachable will guarantee that at least one of the guys in the group will start a conversation. (Guys tend to gravitate to girls who are alone.) Mingle a little and throughout the conversation complain to them that it always takes so long to get a drink at the bar. This will give them the opportunity to step up their game, and offer to purchase a drink.

Attaining a beverage really does not need the effort of two people; however, the real trick here is being able to flirt until it results into a free drink. It may not be the noblest technique, but it sure is effective.

Another option of targets is a group containing one obnoxious, loud, drunk guy. This target is usually the easiest to attract, and is a certain free drink. Considering that the target is intoxicated will work to ones advantage. Most of the time, the typical “drunk guy” will forget how much he has spent throughout the night, but is too drunk too even care. Hanging out with him and his friends will most likely result to him buying a round of shots or a round of drinks for the whole group. It is important to spot a belligerent drunk because they tend to be more gullible and more eager to socially please others.

This caliber of men may not be appealing to many women, but keeping an eye on the prize (the drink) is significant. It is also important to keep a conversation and flirting to a minimum; bearing in mind that one would not want to spend too much time with those types of men, nor give off the wrong signals. End the interaction a couple of minutes after retrieving a drink, not too soon and not too late. Furthermore, making an exit should be made without looking like a snob or making them think they deserve something in return. Always show appreciation on them buying or offering a drink. Do not make it known that the conversation was only to get a drink out of it. There are many ways to exit in a polite manner, for instance: “I’m going to look for my friends,” “I’m going to use the restroom,” “I have a phone call coming in,” and ending these all with “I’ll see you in a bit” is a great way to excuse oneself courteously, and not making it seem that they were being used.

There it is, having a great Saturday night is not so difficult! Avoid spending any money by sharing clothes, carpooling, and flirting! Along the way, one might end up with free drinks, a boost in ego, and laughs shared amongst friends.